High Noon in the Cold War: Kennedy, Krushchev, and the Cuban Missile Crisis

By Max Frankel

Presidio Press, United States, 2005. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Reprint. 208 x 140 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. One of the giants of American journalism now re-creates an unforgettable time in which the whole world feared extinction. High Noon in the Cold War captures the Cuban Missile Crisis in a new light, from inside the hearts and minds of the famous men who provoked and, in the nick of time, resolved the confrontation. Using his personal memories of covering the conflict, and gathering evidence from recent records and new scholarship and testimony, Max Frankel corrects widely held misconceptions about the game of nuclear chicken played by John Kennedy and Nikita Khrushchev in October 1962, when Soviet missiles were secretly planted in Cuba and aimed at the United States. High Noon in the Cold War portrays an embattled young American president not jaunty and callow as widely believed, but increasingly calm and statesmanlike and a Russian ruler who was not only a wily old peasant but an insecure belligerent desperate to achieve credibility. Here, too, are forgotten heroes like John McCone, the conservative Republican CIA head whose intuition made him a crucial figure in White House debates. In detailing the disastrous...
