The view now given of the writers meaning appears amply accordant with the declared design of heaven in effecting the event. This was to cause a dispersion of the multitudes congregated at Babylon; an end which did not require for its accomplishment the instantaneous formation of new languages, but simply such a confusion in the utterance of the old, as should naturally lead to misapprehension, discord, and division. The dialectic discrepancies, however, thus originating, though perhaps not very great at first, would become gradually more and more marked, as men became more widely separated from each other, and by the influence of climate, laws, customs, religion, and various other causes, till they finally issued in substantially different languages. As this is the simplest, so it is perhaps the most rational account of the confusion of tongues at Babel, an event in regard to which historically considered, it is probable there will always adhere some points of obscurity to task and to baffle the researches of the learned. 2. As they journeyed from the East. Heb. in their breakings-up, or remo, ings. The term is peculiar, being almost exclusively applied to that kind of progress which is made by Nomadic hordes as they alternately pitch and strike their tents, and slowly advance with their flocks and herds, from one region to another. The idea usually attached to the English term to journey, implying a more or less rapid passage from one place to...
